CABECEO

SYNOPSIS

A passionate Argentine Tango dance fantasy featuring a woman exploring the sensual and dangerous possibilities presented by a potential new lover.

WHAT IS “CABECEO”?

“Cabeceo” is a term in Argentine Tango for silently inviting someone to dance. The lead dancer will make eye contact with a potential partner and nod. If the prospective partner nods back, the invitation to dance has been accepted.

THE MAKING OF “CABECEO”

I started my path towards directing CABECEO as a student. I wasn’t looking to make a film. I often work as an editor, which frequently involves being alone in room for hours on end. In 2016, I decided learning a new skill that required some human interaction was probably a good idea. So, I signed up for ballroom dance classes, primarily thinking I was going to learn to Swing dance because, you know, that looks cool. My instructor for my first lesson was Jennifer (Jenn) Berry who convinced me to learn not just Swing, but Salsa and Argentine Tango. To my surprise, I fell in love with the language of Tango. As a dance student Jenn suggested I push myself by performing in a few shows with a choreographed routine just a bit outside my skill level as a challenge. This idea gave me horrific childhood flashbacks to sitting through my younger sister’s ballet recitals. However, I figured I was committed to the whole experience at this point. Then my storytelling brain took over and I thought, “What if our routine told a story? How would that work?”

I typed up a short story about two people attracted to each other, searching to see if there is a deep connection, and gave it to Jenn. I saw it as a Tango routine, set to Fiona Apple’s cover of “Sally’s Song” from THE NIGHTMARE BEFORE CHRISTMAS. Jenn choreographed the dance to match the narrative beats I had outlined. As we rehearsed, I asked myself, “How I would film this dance?” Once that thought happened, making a short film of this story was a fait accompli.

Thankfully, my friend Matt Keil had been contemplating moving from TV producer to film producer. So, I offered him a challenge. Shoot two very different films across a five consecutive day production period in a single location with the same crew. Matt was all in. The first film would be the politically-minded drama FLAT EARTHER and the second would be a Tango dance fantasy called, CABECEO.

Rehearsals began in the fall of 2019. Since Jenn had been my guide into the world of dance it was natural to cast her in the lead role. To play Jack to Jenn's Sally, we both felt Claudio Predieri was perfect, as he brought and deep and authentic knowledge of Argentine Tango and a bit of the Rudolph Valentino smolder.

We also cast actress/dancer Rebecca Bartlett and dancer/singer Ella as two sirens who serve as obstacles for Sally to fight through to get to Jack.

Alas, our NIGHTMARE BEFORE CHRISTMAS homage had to end with the Jack and Sally character names. Original music was needed to make our dance number come to life. I recruited my usual composer Darren Fung, who has worked with me on FAR, UNE LIBÉRATION, and several other projects. However, the unique challenge here was not to provide music to a finished edited film, but to create original music Jenn and Claudio could use to choreograph a dance from scratch. What followed was an intense back and forth process that none of us had been prepared for, as Darren would give us bits of music that Jenn, Claudio, and I could rehearse with and then give notes on. It took four months for this dialog between story, dance, and music to play out. Finally, in January 2020, three weeks before production, Darren recoded his score with an intimate group of Tango musicians.

As I was now rehearsing with the casts of both FLAT EARTHER and CABECEO, Co-producer Regis Ternecio was tasked with finding a filming location for the two films. The solution was the bar Fuego in Pomona. Open to Salsa dancers on Friday and Saturday evenings, the club was closed Sunday-Thursday giving us an ideal window to shoot our two films.

Alina Ivette, whose work I had admired in the feature film CRUEL HEARTS, was brought on to design the costumes. A challenge because while the film starts and ends in a real-world club setting, the middle takes place in a hyper fantasy world, meaning all the main character needed two sets of clothes. Alina expertly acquired and modified store purchases to bring out the personalities of all the players in both worlds. The centerpiece of her work was designing and constructing an original dress for Jenn's fantasy world appearance.

Just as the costumes required multiple looks, I worked with George Feucht and his gaffer Matt Gulley to design the multiple lighting looks required to compliment the various stages of Jack and Sally's relationship represented in the dance sequence. We used an intricate computer-controlled lighting system that was programmed to change colors and tones in sync with our music and choreography.

Production on our two short films began on Sunday February 16, 2020. FLAT EARTHER, which was designed as a single nine-and-a-half-minute shot was completed on the first night, allowing our team the remaining four days to capture the elaborate dance sequences as well as the unique sound and movement montages I had designed to bring us into Sally's fantasy world.

Our first night on CABECEO saw a thirty-person crew running two cameras along with our four leads, and an additional thirty extras to fill the club space. By the last day of production, we were down to only Jenn and Claudio. That night, starting at 9pm and running to 6am they performed the complete three plus minute dance sequence nineteen times, plus inserts so I could capture every angle I had planned out. It was a marathon. The result is a tribute to their talent and athleticism.

As post-production began in March 2020, the world came to a halt. To edit the film, I looked to my friend and former University of Southern California classmate Barrie Wise. Together we embarked on a unique editing process that was done entirely by remote with Barrie sharing cuts with me on-line and feedback happening via phone chats and text messages. I would never want to edit a film that way again but thanks my long friendship with Barrie we were able to make it work.

One lovely bit of unexpected synergy that happened as we finished editing the film was when co-star Ella contributing her song “Don’t Tease” to the final club sequence and we used it to play over our closing credits.

Final sound work was handled by another USC friend, D.J. Lynch at his Sound Rebels facility in Burbank.

Producer Matt Keil and I were determined that CABECEO premiere at an in-person film festival when it was safe and not at one of the many on-line festivals that happened during quarantine. CABECEO is a celebration of music, light, and dance designed for a big screen. We are tremendously excited that the time has come to share the film with audiences.

I started this process as a student, and I have learned more than I could possibly imagined.
